About the Web page converter: Web page converter works with a user's browser and a single HTML page. The converter is not an HTML editor, but a wizard that walks the user through the conversion process. The HTML page is fed through a variety of filters to automatically remove the many tags, software and scripts on the page that make the page difficult to render and to save time and bandwidth. The result is a much more readable HTML page. All elements of the original page are preserved and only the most important or interesting information is removed or replaced. This has the added benefit of making the page much easier to move from computer to computer. Users can easily post HTML pages on web servers or they can email the page to other users. The Web page converter also preserves more formatting information on the page, meaning that site-specific formatting styles can be used if desired. The user can convert a single HTML file or a collection of HTML files
