Credit Solutions is a credit repair company that was officially recognized by the Better Business Bureau (BBB) in 2013 by removing their "A+" rating due to a consumer dispute. Credit Solutions was also listed by the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) as a debt collector in 2014. Until 2018, the company was run by Wendy Balsley-Hoffman, who was personally served a subpoena by the FTC in 2015. Citi has finally made it easier to get money for those times when you don't have a debit card or credit card. A new app called Instant Cash lets customers create an account with the bank or credit union they are already a customer of and can instantly receive money. The firm said that currently the service supports DirectDebit and Standing Order payments in the UK and is available as a downloadable app in the UK and Ireland, and as a mobile app in the United States. Those who have already adopted cashless payment methods will find it easier to manage their finances. "We want to challenge the way consumers think about cash and give them a way to access their money whenever and wherever they want." Citi said that customers will have access to their money instantly, even if they do not have a card. Customers with Standing Order will have the ability to pay bills automatically, send money to others, transfer funds among linked accounts, and manage their accounts in real-time. Instant Cash is the latest venture by Citi, which has been offering services such as prepaid debit cards and cash-dispensing apps for some time. For the past decade, American Express has been one of the most widely used methods of online shopping.
