But as I was preparing to take my next step in the startup world, I didn't want to stray too far from the crypto sphere. This post will be the first of many to come, and I'll be following closely with updates on all three of my ventures, as I now have a more varied work schedule. In my last post, I discussed how I came to realize that I simply wasn't happy with the life I was living. At that time, my creative side and curiosity was holding me back. In contrast, social media and new technology gave me the opportunity to immediately share my ideas and thoughts with people. Since then, I've worked to connect my passions for music and technology. In this way, I believe I can take my ideas to new heights. These ventures wouldn't be possible without the support of those closest to me. It's a blessing to have people who are always there for me. My family never shows me anything less. With that in mind, I recently returned to my work and made the decision to take on one new project that I've been interested in for a while. Called Eyespots, this startup is based on a visual problem I have with my iPhone. The issue I'm referring to is the fact that on certain devices, apps are too dark when the iPhone is activated. As a result, iPhone users can't see photos properly. I've been looking into a number of solutions to fix this problem, but there is no direct solution. These moments of weakness have previously kept me from making any major advancements with my ventures. When I found out that the Eyespots platform, which is completely off-chain, could be used to solve my problem, I knew I had found
